Q: What is the difference between HTTP and FTP? What is the difference between HTTP and FTP? What are the advantages and disadvantages of each? Are there any security/performance/ implementation issues with either? A: FTP is File Transfer Protocol, HTTP is HyperText Transfer Protocol. A: FTP is used to transfer files from one computer to another computer over a network. It also supports file upload. HTTP is a protocol used to transfer data over the Internet, via HyperText Transfer Protocol, the successor of FTP. It supports both file upload and retrieval. A: FTP is a protocol for transferring data between systems, whereas HTTP is a protocol used for transferring data over the Internet. FTP is a text protocol which communicates commands to transfer files between systems. The requests (i.e. commands) and responses (i.e. data) in FTP are text based. HTTP is a transfer protocol which is more advanced than FTP and commonly used as the underlying transfer protocol of all WWW services such as HTTP, FTP, Telnet and SMTP. HTTP is a binary protocol with additional HTTP headers that allows the header of the data to carry additional information. HTTP supports a request and a response. The request is a text based and consists of the header and the body of the request. The response is also text based and consists of the header and the body of the response. In FTP the request and response are both text based. The request is the command to transfer the files and the response is the status which identifies the outcome of the command. HTTP doesn't support file transfer. It is used mainly to transfer data over the Internet. Here is some discussion about the differences. Do you have a message for yourself that is trying to get out?
