Download from HotfileQ: How to allow user to type an integer in EditText using Robotium I'm trying to test an android app which has an EditText, and I'd like to write a test which allows me to fill it with an integer, and then test the app checks if the entered number is valid, i.e. if it's an integer greater than 0 and smaller than 50000. Can someone recommend how to do it using Robotium? Thanks A: This is a good tutorial. I haven't used robotium, but I would think that a simple android:id should give you this. editText = getView().findViewById(R.id.editText); In this example editText is a reference to the single EditText child of your activity These days, people are getting their information through more than just traditional media. While television has been essential to the way most people keep up with the news, people are also becoming more comfortable checking out information online than they are reading an evening paper. With the right amount of search engine optimization applied to your website, you may be able to get more people to your website and potentially make more money. Search Engine Optimization Because people rely on search engines to get information, the most popular search engine on the web is Google. If you want to know the latest headlines, or just want to get an in-depth look at an industry or subject, Google is the best place to turn. If you're trying to get more traffic to your website, there are ways to get some of Google's attention. One of the simplest things you can do is put text links on your site to other sites with more relevant information. People often click on links to things they are interested in. If you are trying to get more traffic to your website, you should get more people to click on the links you are posting to your social media sites. The best way to make sure you are building links is to provide helpful content that other people would find interesting or useful. This is a good way to build good, search engine-friendly links to your website. Depending on your business, you may also want to get some Google Adwords. If you don't know much about this,

"Our experiments show that emission wavelength depends not only on quantum dot size, but also on the material surrounding the quantum dots," said Christopher Trojak, a University of Massachusetts Amherst professor of physics and astronomy. "We also observed that, when the surrounding material has a larger band gap than the quantum dots, the emission spectrum undergoes additional shifts in wavelength. These observations are a big departure from current predictions based on models that do not incorporate real-world effects, so it's important to understand the physics involved." In their experiments, the researchers produced a range of materials in which there is a difference in the material
